Delancey Sports recreation hub coming to 212 Highland Street

ADAM FRISK
Journalist

Big changes are coming to downtown Haliburton Village as Delancey Sports plans to transform the historic building at 212 Highland Street into a multi-purpose sports and recreation facility.

Having spent the last five years in their current location at 162 Highland Street, owners Erika Mozes and Josh Karam are taking an ambitious leap up the road.

"We've actually been looking at that building for over a year and trying to think about what we could do to kind of elevate the main street," Mozes said in an interview last week.

Having already expanded to Sir Sam's Ski/Ride a couple of years ago and opened a location in Bracebridge last year, the owners are looking to offer the community something more than just a retail store.

"We want to build something a little bit different that's not just retail … more

A pool for Christmas at Pinestone

EMILY STONEHOUSE
Editor

Going into the new year, Pinestone Resort and Conference Centre are making a splash.

While the current pool has been in location for over 35 years, prior to the COVID-19 pandemic, the heater went in it, causing the heated pool to lose its warming option. During Covid, no one was allowed to use the space as per public protocols, so the issue was not immediately resolved. "Plus there was some wear and tear to the interior," added general manager of Pinestone, Andy MacMillan.

Fast forward to present day, with MacMillan in the GM seat, he thought it was best to prioritize the usage of the pool. He brought in Koho Pools, a company out of Barrie, to tackle the issues that had arisen in the space. "They were excellent to work with," he said. "Just unbelievably good."

Within two months, the company had the pool back up and running. Newly salt-water and squeaky clean with new filters, heaters, and pumps, the pool passed the official certification to be a Class B facility.

A glimpse inside the Pinestone pool - fully heated and filled with saltwater. Currently available for overnight guests at the Pinestone, staff hope to welcome the community in shortly. /EMILY STONEHOUSE staff

But based on the class system designated by the health unit, it cannot be formally offered as a public pool. "Class B pools are what are seen in hotels, condos, and clubs," clarified MacMillan. "It's about the turnover rate. Class A pools are public pools, and it comes down to turnover rates - how many times the 30,000 gallons of water goes through the pool."

So while the pool is ready and available for overnight guests at Pinestone, the option to offer access to the public must follow the criteria based on the health unit. "We did this for the community," said MacMillan. "So we are exploring the possibilities and the options available to open this to our community."

One option MacMillan is looking into is a booking system with memberships. He is also seeking clarification around options for birthday parties and special events, allowing community members to spend the day at Pinestone without needing to stay overnight. "But we want to do everything right," he said. "We are working closely with the health unit on this."

More information will become available on access to the pool in the new year. In the meantime, MacMillan is happy to get one step ahead in creating a destination the community can benefit from. "The response from the community has been incredible," he said, referencing the hundreds of comments and likes they received from announcing the pool on social media. "We're just as excited as they are to welcome them in."

Lengthy Minden meeting keeps budget up for debate

EMILY STONEHOUSE

Editor

During a nearly nine-hour special meeting of council on Dec. 15, Minden Mayor Bob Carter presented the first draft of the municipal budget under the new regulations of strong mayor powers. "In discussions with many other mayors, (we) discovered that there were many different approaches to put a budget together," he said. "Now I was in a bit of a unique situation because I'm on the finance committee at the county, so I was privy to the whole development of the county budget that was taking place parallel to this."

Carter referenced a budget as "a best estimate of the upcoming year," noting that affordability is a large factor to consider in preparing the document.

"The idea is to maintain our healthy reserves, ensure fiscal responsibility, and ensure that we have the services and infrastructure that we need," he said. With those considerations taken into account, Carter shared that it would be a tax increase of 3.95 per cent, "Which is, I think, reasonable," he said. According to Carter's report to council, that increase includes enhanced service levels, a robust capital expenditure program focusing on infrastructure, a new Community Centre in Lochlin, 1.5 per cent put aside for future capital needs, and maintaining healthy reserves to ensure fiscal sustainability.

"We tried to ensure that people who live here can continue to afford to live here," Carter said. "And that's a very large challenge."

The first portion of the Dec. 15 meeting was a public meeting, welcoming the public to have an opportunity to share their thoughts. The next step was to come out of the public meeting, and allow council the opportunity to debate the proposed tax increase.

Senior staff were also given an opportunity to break down the costs within their department, and outline the priorities for the coming year.

After seven hours of budget talk, tensions began to increase amongst council members. While councillor Pam Sayne saw the silver lining of having an asset management plan and a strategic plan in place, others started to falter at the length of the meeting. "We have to look at some of our wins," said Sayne, "I'm very frustrated like other people are too, but at the same time, we have to step back and say we've got some really good wins here."

"It gets to the point where people can't afford to live here or want to live here," said Councillor Tammy McKelvey, "but we can't just keep borrowing money. That's not going to make it livable here."

"The question is, which projects do we not do if we're not going to borrow," countered Mayor Carter. "What is it that we leave out?" he asked, referencing the 25-year investment in Scotch Line, plus additional roads and equipment needed for the municipality to function.

"Frankly, it's 4:30, I'm not the only one tired in this room," said McKelvey. "To try to do a budget in one day: way too much, but if you're going to make it so that we have no choice but to stick with it here tonight … "

> "We tried to ensure that people who live here can continue to afford to live here, and that's a very large challenge."
> - Minden Mayor Bob Carter

"You don't have to decide on what amendments you're making tonight," clarified Carter.

"Well, I have to decide before the January meeting and I did want to have Christmas in there somewhere," snapped McKelvey.

Carter confirmed that the dates are legislated by strong mayor powers. With the method that it is proposed, Carter was set to present the budget on Dec. 15, with amendments to come in from members of council by Jan 8. Carter then has the option to move forward with the amendments, or veto them as presented.

"We can't get through this all today," said McKelvey. "Or do you want to continue to get through this all today?"

McKelvey was seeking the opportunity to go through each line item and inquire about how the price points would impact the 2027 budget. "And I feel like we're too tired to do it now," she said.

"I'm agreeable," said Councillor Ivan Ingram. "I think we should shut it down. We're not being very productive right now. I think we should stop and pick another date."

McKelvey shared that she does not believe the next budget meeting should be a part of a regular meeting. Clerk Vicki Bull noted that the budget was publicly published on Dec. 10, and from that point, according to protocol, council has 30 days to provide amendments, bringing the last day of amendments to land on Jan. 8.

Bull welcomed amendments to the proposed budget to be directed to the CAO, to be discussed during the next round of deliberations. "I think everyone is worn out and tired," she said. "I don't think we're going to get anywhere today."

Council set an additional budget meeting to take place on Jan. 6 to continue the conversation. There was no formal resolution set for amendments to the proposed budget, but with considerable discussion around items council may consider amending, those proposals may be brought to the special meeting of council set for Jan. 6.

The meeting was adjourned at 5:42 p.m. Future conversations will take place regarding Minden's budget in the new year.

Light in the crowd

THE ROOM feels sticky, with a tactile buzz reverberating through the crowd. You've just kicked your snowy boots off in the hall, tried your best to ply the worn-down Velcro onto your scuffed indoor shoes.

It's a big day. That's what your teachers told you. Behind those doors there are hundreds of people. At your young age of five, it's more than you've ever seen gathered in one place at one time, in your entire life.

Your tummy does a somersault, but you hold your friend's hand. You adjust your reindeer crown and weave your way past the tall people, all blocking your view.

And while there are hundreds of faces looking back at you, there's only one you're looking for. Someone familiar. Someone that feels like home in a world that's spinning.

And suddenly you spot it. Their eyes are locked on you, their face beaming like a light in the crowd. They give you a thumbs up, mouth the words 'it's okay, you got this!' and then you start.

A slightly off-key rendition of Jingle Bells, belted to your little heart's desire.

I watched this happen countless times this past week. I see it every year when I photograph the school holiday concerts. The scanning, the surveying, the little eyes looking lost. And then, that moment of clarity. You physically see their bodies change; postures relaxing and eyes shining a little brighter. All because someone showed up for them.

It hurts my heart when kids can't find that light. I wish deeply and terribly that I could offer it to them, but to many, I am just another stranger; a melded face in the crowd that blends and blurs while they seek security.

Showing up. It starts at a young age, looking for that light in the crowd. But it continues as we grow up.

We think we need certain things in life. A new car, a trendy appliance, an updated wardrobe.

But in our little hearts, all we need is that feeling of having someone show up.

And this need translates beyond childhood. As we age, we look for our partners to notice us, our employers to recognize our work, our politicians to represent us on a bigger stage.

We need someone in our corner. We need to scan the crowd and zero in on that face looking back at us. Hearing the words 'it's okay, you've got this' and repeating it over and over again.

Editorial

Emily Stonehouse

When we break it down, we're really quite simple. We spend days, months, years, circling around big ticket items. We listen to people stress about holiday shopping and budgets and skewed politics and controversial news and and and and.

But what if we wiped that all away, this time of year. What if we shoved past the noise, held our friend's hand, and showed up.

Hundreds of locals came out to those school holiday concerts. They took time from their days, they carved a window out to watch an off-key, two minute rendition of Jingle Bells. And it was worth more than any money could buy to see those faces light up. The moment they knew someone showed up. Someone is in their corner.

So as we wind down into the holiday season, I hope you feel that euphoria of knowing that someone is there for you. That someone believes in you. That someone out there feels like home when the world is spinning. And if you don't have that, perhaps you can be that for someone else.

Because deep in our little hearts, we all need to see that light in the crowd.

Wuffy the scam

WHEN I was writing my column about AI powered toys a couple of weeks ago, I kept coming across a little brown AI powered plush dog named Wuffy. I first noticed Wuffy in Google's sponsored shopping results alongside other AI powered toys. It was also noticeably cheaper. When I clicked into the Wuffy website, it became very apparent that Wuffy, along with many other so-called "AI powered toys", was a scam.

When you start looking, you can see the internet is littered with scammy retail products. These products can seem, at first glance, legitimate. They might be included in Google's sponsored results, or on popular retail websites such as Amazon and Walmart. You might see them in ads on Instagram, YouTube, TikTok, or Facebook. You might even find influencers peddling reviews about those products. But if you look hard enough, it's not difficult to determine what's real from what's fake.

Humans &

Technology

Erin Kernohan-Berning

When I visited the Wuffy website, the video and images were pretty clearly AI generated – which alone would make me assume that the product itself wasn't real. But also, real businesses with real products like Coca-Cola, Burberry, and McDonald's have dabbled in AI generated ads, so that alone isn't sufficient evidence of a scam. Other aspects of the website were definitely scammy though.

A banner with the logos of well-respected technology publications such as Wired and The Verge implied some kind of endorsement or media coverage, but there were no links to articles or reviews (anyone can grab a logo off a Google image search). The reviews section of the site boasted 1,443 reviews but only showed eight. Of those reviews, photos of Wuffy looked wildly different from one another, and nothing like the website advertised.

When I looked up reviews of Wuffy, there was a flood of YouTube results with accounts claiming that Wuffy was an amazing product. However, these were also clearly AI generated. When I checked the accounts behind these videos, they were AI-slop accounts – serving up AI generated reviews of other presumably fake products. When looking at the dates on the videos, these accounts have been uploading 10 or more videos daily – all with the same kind of format. Positive Wuffy reviews on YouTube also featured numerous unrelated URLs pointing to the same looking website with minor variations.

This flooding of the internet with fake reviews and multiple websites serves a purpose for scammers. The large volume of fake content is more likely to be picked up by algorithms, meaning the scam rises to the top of search results while reviews calling out the scam are harder to find. Also, as the scam websites are eventually flagged as such, there's a long lineup of identical websites waiting to take their place.

I found a few creators that had ordered a Wuffy and made videos about their experiences. In both cases, the creators (fully suspecting that Wuffy wasn't at all what it was advertised to be) did receive a physical item. However, far from being an AI powered puppy, it was one of those squeaky battery powered toy dogs that have been around since the 1980s.

While there are rules around deceptive advertising, and while companies like Google will take down fraudulent ads, scam ads are still ubiquitous online. There's also the question of what kind of incentives do companies have for combatting scam ads – after all, it's not like the scammer gets a refund after their fraudulent ads are pulled. Reuters reported in November that Meta predicted that 10 per cent of its ad revenue - $16 billion – would likely be generated by scam advertisements.

The best thing that you can do as a consumer is to be aware that scammy ads online are a problem. Avoid clicking directly on ads, whether through Google or social media, and instead visit product websites directly. Look up reviews of products from different sources, especially trusted and well-known sources for those types of products. Be aware that generative AI is making scam ads and scam reviews easier to create and watch for anything odd.

If you do fall for a scam ad, you can try reporting it to the Competition Bureau in Canada. If you used a credit card to make a purchase through a misleading ad, make sure you watch for any additional transactions or unauthorized transactions and report those to your bank. Most platforms do allow you to report misleading ads, and though the responsiveness can vary, it's worth doing. It's always better to take some extra time to verify where your money is going and for what. Don't let that online impulse by turn into an expensive disappointment.

'Twas the cats before Christmas

Loon Tales

Steve Galea

WE HAD cats before Christmas and all through the house, not a creature was purring, for lack of a mouse.
Our stockings were hung by the chimney with care,
each of them covered in a coat of cat hair.
We humans were nestled all snug in our beds,
And for once not a feline was perched on our heads.
When out from the living room there arose such a clatter,
I rose out of the bed half-expecting blood spatter.
My wife in her jammies, and I in my briefs,
Expected to encounter some big Grinch-like thieves.
When just past the hallway there sounded a crash,
I knew it would cost me a boatload of cash.
Away to the Christmas tree I flew like a duck,
I yelled lots of words, mostly rhyming with truck.
When what to my wondering eyes should I see,
But a huge, cat-made mess, and a knocked down spruce tree.
I knew in a moment it wasn't Saint Nick,
So I looked at the cats who had pulled off this trick.
More rapid than beagles, the ornaments flew,
There was howling and mayhem for a moment or two.
"Get, Mumbles! Get, Maggie! Oh, Rose you bad pup!
You watched them do this, and you'll watch me clean up."
Just out of reach at the top of the shelves,
Both of our cats seemed quite proud of themselves.
As dry leaves that before the wild hurricane fly,
And when they meet with an obstacle, mount to the sky.
So up to the ceiling our ornaments flew,
All hitting the floor in a second or two.
There was garland destroyed, and a star with one point,
Like a hurricane had blown through the length of the joint.
As I blew my own top and was turning around,
I watched our old tomcat then fall to the ground.
He was wrestling with decorations, with his claws and his feet
And tinsel adorned him from tail to teeth.
And though some was missing we would find it quite soon,
As it came out the back and he howled at the moon.
Though he seemed full of joy, we considered taking him back,
But I couldn't contain him in one little sack.
His eyes, how they twinkled! His claws, oh how scary!
His fangs were like needles! His meow though was merry!
His droll little mouth was chewing up a bow,
And the bottom of his chin was covered in fake snow.
A stump of a pipe he held tight in his teeth,
He got it from the Santa Claus ornament beneath.
The cat had a broad face and a little round belly,
That shook when he howled and his breath was quite smelly.
He was chubby and plump, an evil old rat,
And I cursed when I saw him, that dirty darn cat.
A look in his eye and a twist of his head,
Soon gave me to know we had more things to dread.
He spoke not a word, but went straight to his work,
And he ripped up the stockings and then turned with a jerk,
And laying a claw to the tip of his nose,
And giving a nod, up the garland he rose.
He sprang to the sleigh, and he let out a howl
And he jumped up and down and I gave him a scowl
But I heard him exclaim, as ran out of sight
"I can ruin a tree, because a cat has the right."

Ice

Our road Down

Sharon Lynch

THE PORCH light caught the side of the small snow bank and Trevor was immediately lost in the past. Maybe it was the angle of white or maybe it was the smoothly shovelled deck beside it but the scene made him think of ice rinks. Like the one his dad made every winter in their backyard. Trevor loved circling around that little patch of slipperiness under the watchful stars.

Skating on the public open-air rink down the street was okay too but not the same as his backyard. He didn't like putting on his skates there, in the brisk northern afternoon, fingers numb and toes almost. Sometimes he had to share the ice with another kid or two but often he had it all to himself. That was the best. If he fell – no one saw. And he fell a fair bit because he was not a natural athlete.

Trevor had been sickly as a baby and young child and although he was fine now, his body had some catching up to do. And some skills would never be as good as his peers. Balance was one of those so his skating was – well he'd never be a hockey player. He also had weak ankles and was self-conscious that other, more accomplished skaters would sneer at his efforts. But he still enjoyed skimming over the frozen surface, pretending he was on his way to the North Pole to visit Santa.

When his dad was transferred and the family moved to the west coast, Trevor missed his Ontario winter. Mild rainy weather was no match for the cold clear shock of air when he stepped outside back home. Indoor rinks were a poor substitute.

But all was forgiven when the family returned east and moved to cottage country. With the lake a stone's throw from the front door, he was in wintertime heaven. The ice surface was a little bumpy in places but the expanse of frozen water called to him whenever he returned home for the holidays. That's probably why he loved Joni Mitchell's song "I wish I had a river". Because there were days he also wished he could skate away, just he and the ice and sky going on forever.

He doesn't skate as much these days. A hectic life never seems to leave time for it. But this winter will be different, he told himself in the fall. Since he wasn't heading south for a winter vacation, he planned on having a lot of ice time. And he just might have company for a change. But that was a good thing. Because Sarah liked to skate as well. Although she had been a competitive skater at one time, she told Trevor now she really enjoyed just lacing up and taking a nice, long trip across the frozen surface. She was the first person he'd met who felt the same way as he did about ice. He took that as a hopeful sign for the future.

The Great South Lake Pajama Project brings warmth to communities

Today marks another special day for The Great South Lake Pajama Project, as pajamas are delivered to those in need across our communities. This program would not be possible without the incredible generosity of local residents and supporters. We extend our heartfelt gratitude to Pregnancy Care & Family Support Centre for the Haliburton Highlands for serving as a drop-off site and for their continued support. This year, hundreds of pajamas were collected and gifted – multiple times –to eleven organizations, helping bring warmth, comfort, and dignity to those who need it most. A special thank you goes to The Bob Lake Association for their outstanding collection efforts and ongoing commitment to this project. We encourage other lake associations to consider participating next year. Pictured is Ann Stephens from Bob Lake, who stopped by last night with a full bag of donations. For someone in need, receiving a brand-new pair of pajamas can truly be life-changing. Merry Christmas from all of us at The Great South Lake Pajama Project! HALIBURTON COUNTY PUBLIC LIBRARY

Book of the Week

Most people overlook the three tiny figures perched at the end of a pier in a famous seascape, but aspiring artist Louisa knows they matter - and she's determined to uncover their story. Twenty-five years earlier, a group of troubled teens found solace on a forgotten pier, spending sun-soaked days sharing jokes, secrets, and small rebellions that bound them together. From that unlikely refuge emerged a remarkable painting that now, unexpectedly, ends up in eighteen-year-old Louisa's hands. As she travels cross-country to trace its origins, she grows anxious about the truths waiting at journey's end. Her search becomes a moving testament to the unexpected shapes of healing, friendship, and art.

My Friends by Fredrik Backman is available at the Haliburton County Public Library as a book or Book Club Set. Visit haliburtonlibrary.ca to place a hold or learn more.

Volunteers needed for ice races

THOMAS SMITH
Journalist

The Minden ice races draw hundreds out for the snowy sport, and are actively looking for volunteers to support this season. /FILE

With snow thick on the ground already, the Canadian Automobile Sports Club's volunteers are hitting the ground running with plans for this year's ice races in Minden.

If you have walked past the Minden Fairgrounds recently, you can see the ice racing track beginning to take shape. Slowly formed up as the snow builds, the outline of the track is already starting to excite passionate ice racing fans.

The track is plowed and shaped courtesy of the Minden Kin Club.

Once the weather is cold enough, the club will bring the water tanker to the track to create its icy surface.

Six of Ontario's car clubs are patiently waiting for their glittering raceway to form. However, they need your help.

With Minden's ice races happening since the 1970s, the club is expecting the sport to grow more than ever this year. With more racers, more volunteers are needed.

Elaine Willis, a seasoned volunteer with the ice racing division of the CASC-OR, says that her father was the person that encouraged her to try out ice racing.

"I started ice racing in the 80s," said Willis. "I had already started volunteering in motorsports, particularly the timing and scoring."

Her father, a racer of formula cars, said that ice racing would be the perfect gateway event before road racing.

Ever since her first time in an ice racing car, she has been hooked.

When you volunteer with the ice races, you are joining a community of like-minded people who are passionate about racing, said Willis.

Volunteering with the ice races allows you to see the inner workings of the event. You get up close and personal with the cars and are able to meet the drivers. The enthusiasm for the ice races is infectious and you will look forward to each racing weekend.

There are many roles needed for volunteers to fill. Willis says that around 30 volunteers are needed each weekend for the ice races to run smoothly.

Some of the titles for volunteers include clerks, stewards, registration staff, timers, scrutineers, grid marshals, corner marshals, and starters.

To give you an idea of the types of roles available, clerks are in charge of running the entire event, stewards enforce the rules and ensure safety and a fair competition, registration staff take care of licensing, paperwork, and racer entries, timers and scorers track finishing positions and race results, scrutineers inspect cars for safety and regulations, and corner marshals keep the race going by monitoring corners, signalling racers with flags, and communication with the race control.

"Whether you are a student looking for volunteer hours or a retiree looking for a fun winter activity, we have a variety of positions that can suit everyone. You can develop racing knowledge and skills, or put learned skills to use, like teamwork, communication, mechanical skills and event-coordination," said Willis. "Volunteers get to meet new people, support local tourism and contribute to a tradition that has been a staple in Minden for generations."

There is a position for every volunteer, no matter your age; something for everybody to do. No prior racing experience is needed.

"We love bringing new people in and showing them the ropes," said Willis.

If you already love watching the ice races, you will fall deeper in love with the sport by getting involved in letting the sport run smoothly, she said.

No experience with cars in any way is needed, only the interest to help. All training will be provided to you.

With the ice races being dependent on the weather, the snow and cold is looking very promising this year.

"Last year was perfect for our entire season and I am hopeful this year will be as well," said Willis. "There is always a January thaw, so hopefully it is mild and won't harm the track."

Volunteering with Minden's ice races lets this racing tradition continue forward after five decades of winter fun.

Whether you think you can help out one weekend or the entire season, Minden ice races need your support.

If you are interested in helping with the races, check out their website casc.on.ca/ice-racing. You can also contact the ice racing director at iceracedir@gmail.com to get involved.

Haliburton BIA prize initiatives called into question

ADAM FRISK

Journalist

"And the winner is?" That is the question some residents and business owners are asking the Haliburton Business Improvement Area (BIA) over the transparency of its event prize giveaways.

Throughout the year, the BIA organizes community staples like Ladies' Shopping Night, Midnight Madness, and the Pumpkin Crawl. These events are designed to boost the downtown economy and promote "shopping local." However, a recurring silence regarding the awarding of prizes has left some participants feeling "tricked."

For Wendy Lingard, a $100 cash prize was the primary motivation to spend a full day "panic-carving" a pumpkin for the BIA's Nov. 1 Pumpkin Crawl at Head Lake Park.

"I was excited because I saw they had a $100 cash prize," Lingard said in a recent interview. "I wasn't sure when they were going to announce the winners … but I was told they'll contact me later."

Six weeks later, Lingard is still waiting. She attempted to follow up through Instagram comments and direct emails, but as of Dec. 17, her inquiries have gone unanswered.

"I was like, was I tricked? Because I put so much work into it and it really wasn't a well-organized event," Lingard said. "They never post the winners. I was like, was there even a winner?"

The confusion isn't limited to the Pumpkin Crawl.

Similar questions surround other major BIA initiatives. Midnight Madness, for example, boasted more than $1,000 in prizes, yet it remains unclear if any winners were ever selected or notified. On Ladies' Shopping Night, a "stamp pass" system was traditionally used to enter for a chance to win a prize, but this year's event switched to a QR code entry. As of Dec. 17, the entry form was still active, and specific prizes were not listed on the submission page, nor were the participating businesses.

The lack of clarity extends to the local businesses that make these prizes possible. Several member businesses told the newspaper that once they donate items or gift cards for BIA events, they rarely receive word on who won, save for the occasional customer who comes in to redeem a registered gift card.

Scott Walling, owner of Haliburton Framing and Photo, and a recent contributor to the BIA's Ladies' Shopping Night event, expressed growing frustration over what he describes as a breakdown in communication with the organization.

Despite the event taking place on Dec. 4, Walling said the prizes he donated, including a custom frame from his store and a curated bag of local artwork from The Space gallery, have yet to be awarded to any participants.

Walling said he reached out via Instagram on Dec. 16 to check on the status of the giveaway.

"On Wednesday, they replied, 'Good morning, the winners have not yet been announced. We are hoping to get that done ASAP,'" Walling said.

The delay in prize announcements isn't Walling's only concern. The business owner also said that his attempts to become more involved in the BIA's leadership have been met with silence.

Walling said he sent an email several weeks ago expressing a formal interest in joining the Board of Directors.

"I have not heard anything back," Walling noted.

Efforts to clarify the BIA's prize distribution process have been met with a wall of silence.

Haliburton BIA chair Brandon Nimigon, who also serves on Bancroft's BIA board, did not respond to multiple emails regarding the status of the prizes. BIA administrator Ioana Zemianschi also declined to comment, referring all inquiries back to Nimigon.

As for Lingard, the experience soured her view of local festivities. She noted that the lack of transparency turned what should have been a fun seasonal activity into a frustrating lesson in community event management.

"Sometimes I'm like, maybe there wasn't a $100 cash prize," she admitted. "Who's getting it?

While the issue at hand is a simple breakdown in communication surrounding the prizes offered, the special events the BIA supports often draw large crowds to businesses and festivities held in the park.

The organization and its members, including the Haliburton County Echo, have gone to great lengths to improve the downtown core. From supporting the Santa Claus parade, the fall decor that greets tourists and locals alike when they drive into town, the BIA is essential for the local economy.

This is a developing story. The Echo will continue coverage as pertinent information becomes available.

Delancey owners 'super excited' about new offerings of a sports and recreation kind of facility," Mozes said. "We're super excited about the plans."

The move is set to revitalize the building, originally a bar and restaurant before becoming a retail store, into a destination for families and fitness enthusiasts alike. Mozes explained the project involves some major renovations to the second floor to modernize the space while preserving the character of the location.

"It's really going to be a building for a whole family to be able to enjoy," she said.

The ground floor will house an expanded Delancey Sports retail space with the larger footprint allowing the business to broaden its inventory of sports essentials, including running gear, lacrosse and curling equipment, and outdoor gear.

The first floor will also include an expanded hockey line, offering a wider selection of equipment for the local players. Building on the success of last year's test run, the new location will feature a larger arcade and will be available for private bookings, such as work and birthday parties. A new feature coming to the expanded location will be a golf simulator, perfect for those who crave a round or two during the dead of winter.

"The arcade and the golf simulator, the idea is that that will be a 24/7 space so people could book it out a little bit later than just when the retail shop is open," Mozes said.

Eyeing a spring opening, the second floor will be converted into a premium fitness facility. The co-owner explained that, unlike other local gyms that focus on group classes, the new space is designed for individual workouts.

The fitness facility will also operate on a 24/7 membership basis, offering high-end equipment, including premium treadmills for long-distance runners, rowers, bikes, and free weights.

"We're really building an individual space so that you'll be able to go on your own time, no pressure," Mozes said.

The new home of Delancey Sports in the heart of Haliburton. Move will take place early in the new year. /ADAM FRISK staff

As for a timeline, the transformation is moving quickly. If all goes well, Mozes anticipates the main floor of the new location, including the retail shop, golf simulator, and arcade, will be open by the end of January.

"But we have to also, you know, get in there and start working our magic," she said with a laugh.

The second-floor fitness facility is targeting a spring launch.

Customers can expect a closure of five to six days in January as the store moves locations.

As the business grows, the owners hope to keep their current staff and potentially hire more team members by summer, signalling good news for local employment and the town's economy.

Festive RIDE campaign

Ontario Provincial Police (OPP) officers across eastern Ontario have conducted nearly 1,100 Festive RIDE (Reduce Impaired Driving Everywhere) programs, with more than 100 impaired drivers being taken off the roads.

East Region OPP officers have now arrested and charged a total of 101 people with impaired driving since the initiative began on Thursday, Nov. 20. That includes 34 in the past week.

Each driver charged with impaired operation has had their licence suspended for 90-days and their vehicle was impounded for seven-days, plus they each have a scheduled court appearance.

Officers have also issued 20 three-day licence suspensions for drivers who were found to be in the warn range on an approved roadside alcohol screening device, that's up by five from last week.

The Festive RIDE campaign runs until January 1, 2026, with officers from Quinte West to the Quebec boundary, and northwest through the Ottawa Valley, continuing to check for drivers who are impaired by alcohol or drugs.

Expect to see RIDE programs day or night, seven days a week. They can happen along major highways, rural roads or downtown streets.

While we could be anywhere, we can›t be everywhere. If you suspect someone is driving impaired by drugs or alcohol, call 9-1-1. You could be saving lives.

Winter song brings community together

EMILY STONEHOUSE
Editor

Laurie Sweig, Bill Black, and Bill Gliddon pause for a picture during a recording session for the Haliburton Highlands Harmony Project. /submitted

There are songs of the season, and as we settle into a winter slumber, the Haliburton Highlands Harmony Project is ready to share theirs.

As of Dec. 21, winter solstice, the yearlong project has launched their final installation of their four seasons. The winter song, titled Some Love It, Some Don't, captures the feelings and emotions of a Haliburton Highlands winter, as told by longtime locals and newcomers alike.

"Creating a song can be so exciting," said Laurie Sweig, the project coordinator, "It can be frustrating too, but the whole thing is so exciting."

The lightbulb moment for the Haliburton Highlands Harmony Project came to Sweig naturally, after she settled into the community six years ago. "Life is so serendipitous," she reflected, noting that she began volunteering with the Canoe FM recording studio three years ago. "I love the area. Love it here, and love songwriting, and I wanted to see more people come through the doors to record at Canoe. Many people don't understand what we have here."

Sweig said that the idea to incorporate the many singers, songwriters, and musicians together through one project came organically. She had just started taking violin lessons from instructor Bethany Houghton, and brought the idea to her first. "I told her what I wanted to do and she connected me with others," said Sweig. "Then I just thought, 'I'm going to do this and see what happens.'"

Four songs happened. Each different, each unique, each telling a story about life in Haliburton County. They are songs listeners can relate to, stories that deserve to be told. As is the experience with most music, it connects a community; each feeling tethered to the soul of the song.

With over 55 people involved in the initiative, it took off. Many of the artists had not worked with other artists before.

Canoe FM offers recording space

Some are longtime residents of the community who have dabbled in music their whole lives, others are brand new but carry a fiery passion for the arts in their hearts.

"My goal was to make sure that they're all really proud of this project," said Sweig, noting the recent launch of the winter song, complimenting the three seasons released prior. "They donated their time and their talent to this."

Roxanne Casey, the manager of Canoe FM, was thrilled with the project. "Canoe FM was very pleased to be a part of the Harmony Project, a collaboration that brought together community voices around four original songs, written in most parts by Laurie," she said. "It was wonderful to see so many musicians come and go through the station, contributing their talents and enthusiasm to a project that was so positively received."

Casey noted that the Harmony Project is just one of many musical initiatives created in the local radio station's studio. Canoe provided the recording space, equipment, and on-air support by sharing the finished songs with their listeners. Casey encourages those interested in using the recording space to reach out to thestudio@canoefm.com.

While the four songs of the seasons are completed, this isn't the end of the line for sound engineer Sweig. "That's not in my nature," she laughed. "I love a project like this. Something that starts and something that ends. And the Haliburton Highlands Harmony Project is such an umbrella. It can bring people together."

The four songs can be heard and downloaded for free via Bandcamp, and can be listened to seasonally on Canoe FM. For those looking to get in touch with Sweig for future projects, you can contact Haliburton3Hproject@gmail.com or visit their Facebook page, Haliburton Highlands Harmony Project.

Here's How It Works:
Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

In Loving Memory of

Audrey Alma Hewitt

It is with deep sadness our family announces the passing of Audrey Alma Hewitt. She died peacefully in her sleep on December 13, 2025 in her 91st year. Born August 31, 1935, she is survived by her husband Jack to whom she was married for an extraordinary 68 years. She also leaves her son Jack (Julie), son Paul (Kari) and daughter Sandra (Keith). Audrey was incredibly proud of her exceptional grandchildren; Ashlee (Brad), Sara, Adam (Melissa), Christopher (Margaret), Matthew (Danica), Laura, Jeffrey (Kate) and Kyle. She also had six wonderful great-grandchildren; Charlotte, Finn, Paisley, Callie, Greyson and Hailey. She was predeceased by grandchildren Scott (1990), Jennifer (1991) and Tyler (2021). Audrey spent many happy years with Jack at their home in Eagle Lake. They enjoyed many international trips throughout the world with friends from the Haliburton Highlands, and both played an important role in bringing Canoe FM radio to that area. Audrey was an avid gardener, curler, boater but most important she was quite simply a lovely, lovely lady. It was a privilege to call her wife, mother, grandmother, great-grandmother and friend. In lieu of flowers, donations can be made to the Canadian Kidney Foundation in Audrey's name. Special thanks to the kidney dialysis team at Mackenzie Health (Dr. Nicola Matthews, R.N. Megan Polera and P.D. nurse Lejo), and the staff at Sharon Corners Retirement Residence for their warmth and kindness.
A private family funeral will held.

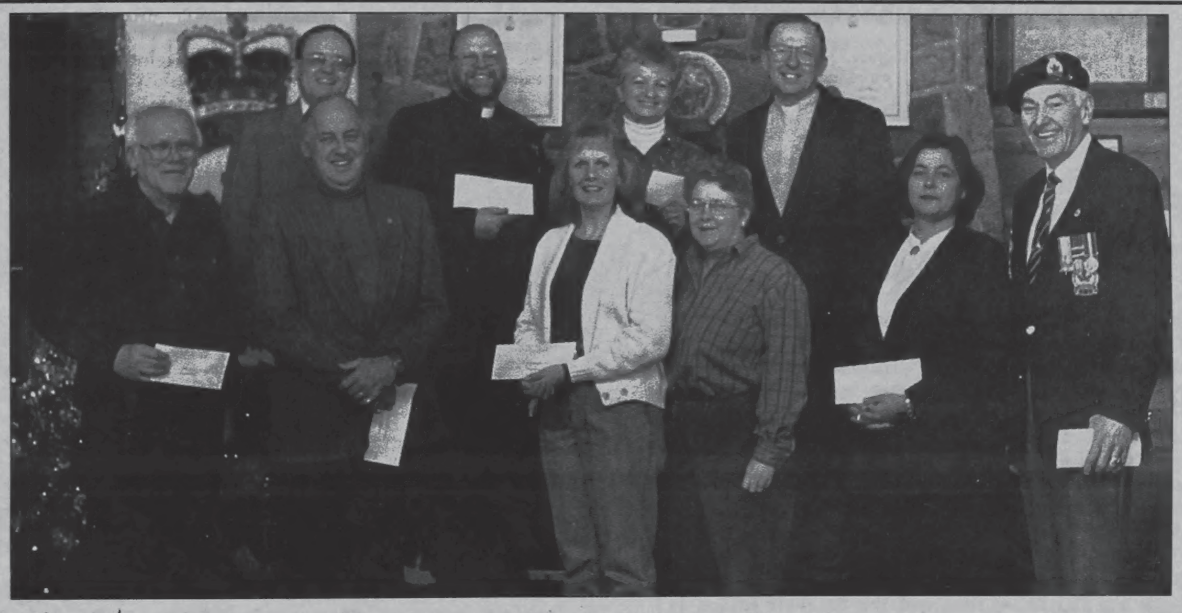
IN THE SPIRIT OF GIVING: Christmas came a wee bit early this year for some of the area's churches and non-profit organizations. It came in the form of some very generous donations from the Minden branch of the Royal Canadian Legion, Branch 636. President Maurice Winterflood, right, distributed cheques to the various groups on December 16. Seen here are: (front row from left) Jerry Rome for the Haliburton County Rescue Sleigh Group which received $500; Mike Maher for Our Lady of Fatima Catholic Church which received $1,000; Louise Leonard for the CSSM Christmas Box Campaign, $1,000, Barbara Walford-Davis for the Minden Food Bank, $500, Dianne Loucks for CHACE Inc., $1,000. Back row, from left, the Minden Bible Church was represented by Pastor Terry Wicks, $1,000; St. Paul's Anglican Church, represented by Rev. Brian Parker , $1,000; Mary Hicks also from the Minden Food Bank; and the Minden United Church, represented by Rev. Peter Walford-Davis, $1,000. The money was raised by the Legion through various lotteries and projects.



Warden selected Tuesday evening

Three in a row for Fearrey

by Jerry Grozelle

Murray Fearrey has been elected Warden of Haliburton County for the third consecutive term. Fearrey was nominated by Jeanne Anthon, who noted that Fearrey had agreed to shoulder the burden on behalf of the county. Anthon expressed her confidence in Fearrey to lead the county into a year of unprecedented change. She said Fearrey has maintained a measure of humour over the past term of office, which has been appreciated.

Anthon noted that Fearrey first served as Warden in 1974. He is only the second person in county history to serve six terms as Warden and the second to have served three consecutive terms.

"He has added another element to our history," Anthon said.

"That doesn't mean I'm ever going to do this again," Fearrey retorted; to which, Anthon quipped, "You have to, until you get it right."

Elva Bates seconded the nomination.

There were no other nominations for the position of Warden.

Fearrey thanked the members of County Council for their vote of confidence.

"I think this year is going to be an exceptionally busy year for us," Fearrey said.

Among the evening's guests was MP John O'Reilly, who offered his congratulations to Fearrey.

"On behalf of the government of Canada, we wish you well and thank you for taking an interest in your community," O'Reilly said. "It's a very trying time in our history, with the downloading. There are a lot of changes coming and as your federal representative I can offer support."

Warden's comments

"Life and change comes to us like a bullet these days, fast and unforgiving," Fearrey said. "County politicians and local politicians are no exception. The pressing challenge is change to get better, quicker. That applies to every walk of life and every profession.

"In these times, there are always amazing possibilities for people who rise to the occasion. In this term, on behalf of the people who put us here, that's what our council must do... rise to the occasion. I must rise to the occasion with you. The Warden can only lead. What we do, and what we accomplish, we will do together.

Fearrey asked the councillors which they thought was more important, the present, or the future.

"Obviously, it's the future, and that's what we must decide in the present," he stated. "As we face the challenges ahead, the real challenge for county council this year, probably more so than ever, will surface early in the year when we discuss the assessment, especially on commercial properties. There will be a lot of options for us. Some options will benefit some municipalities and will be detrimental to others."

Fearrey said it will be difficult, at times, for council members to think of the well-being of the county ahead of their own municipalities.

"I urge you to think about wearing your county hats, because what benefits you today, may not benefit you tomorrow. There are a variety of things happening and you must think about what's good for this county and the citizens of this county and not always what is isolated in your own community."

He gave the example of policing costs, noting that there may be some cost savings for some municipalities to pay their own policing cost, as opposed to paying through a county levy. He pointed out that municipalities such as Anson, Hindon and Minden, with its school and arena, would be expected to generate more police costs than neighbouring municipalities. But the neighbouring municipalities use the services which are provided in Anson, Hindon and Minden

Hospital projects continue on track

The Haliburton Highlands Health Services Board will be moving ahead with its capital planning in spite of the visit to the district of the provincial Health Services Restructuring Commission (HSRC).

The commission was in Peterborough last week examining the delivery of health services through the four counties of Haliburton, Victoria, Peterborough and Northumberland. Hospital boards and other stake-holders within the district were invited to make submissions to the board.

The HHHS was represented by Chair Hugh Nichol, past chair Paul Heffer, vice chair David Coulson and executive director Foster Loucks. The board's written submission outlined the extensive planning and work which had brought the HHHS into existence and its over-all vision for the development of the capital projects and an integrated health system for the service area.

During the board's presentation, the members stressed the need for a quick response, especially in regard to the capital projects. "The meter is running and we are proceeding with our architect to complete the drawings so that construction can begin in the spring," Nichol
